FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

ASC Names Newest Honorary Member

Bethesda, MD (June 18, 2007) – The Adhesive and Sealant Council (ASC) bestowed the title of “Honorary Member” on David Jackson in recognition of his years of outstanding service to ASC and the adhesive and sealant industry. After 17 years of service on the ASC Board of Directors, the past five spent as a non-voting Outside Director, the board was honored to present Jackson with a plaque that marked the occasion at the June board meeting.

With more than 40 years of industry experience, Jackson worked in a variety of capacities including field sales, sales management, marketing, materials management and strategic planning. He served as Board Chairman (2000-02), sat on the Executive Committee, and participated in countless committees and task forces.

“Dave Jackson is as forward thinking as he is passionate,” ASC President Lawrence Sloan stated. “He believes strongly in increasing ASC’s global presence and was the main advocate for nurturing our relationship with Virginia Tech University, with whom the association has produced many technical training courses for our members.”

Honorary membership is a recognition awarded to individuals who have either contributed exceptional service and leadership to ASC, or whose significant achievements and high standing have materially aided and advanced the adhesive and sealant industry. A combination of the former Life and Honorary Member classes, Honorary Members are entitled to complimentary registration to all ASC events, ongoing receipt of ASC publications and special recognition in industry trade press.

“ASC is proud to name Dave Jackson as the recipient of this distinguished recognition.” Sloan stated. “We are grateful for all of Dave’s dedication and hard work over the years. We know he will be successful in all of his future endeavors.”

Jackson will be further recognized by the ASC at the Annual Membership Meeting, which will be held in Kansas City, MO from October 8 – 10, 2007.
